FAO Darren Breen.

Please see enclosed images of signs we removed from site.

We were asked to 'refurbish these'.

Given the condition of the lettering we weren't able to confidently achieve this.

The letter structure has broken down, where rust has appeared, and they would not have the strength to support themselves.

The concern also was based on the fact that these letters contain cold cathode neon within which is electrical. We are concerned that these would pose a health and safety risk on that basis.

As is evident from the images- these letters are beyond repair.

Best regards,

Marco Federico
