Union Park, External Site Signage

Dear Alice

Further to previous conversations, I can confirm that the preference from both Ark and our end user tenant would be that we do not install any kind of building or access identification signage.

Our tenant's security preference is to keep their sites and their location as incognito as practically possible, which would include having zero external signage. Our tenant is a global-leader in their field, and they have a significant number of their own data centres around the world, of which their own policies are that they never install any external signage.

All their deliveries to the site are extremely well planned and coordinated in advance, with the drivers of the deliveries having fully details of locations and contacts to find and enter the secure site.

We would appreciate it if LBH could consider the above when confirming the requirements that they see as a planning necessity for our site with regards to external signage.

If there are any further queries, please feel free to direct them to myself.

Yours sincerely

Daniel Wright
Head of Construction
